Five-Month Term On Liquor Count

GRANDE PRAIRIE.—Convicted on two charges under the Alberta Liquor Control Act, Richard Bergmann was sentenced to five months' imprisonment by Judge T. Galway here. An appeal is pending.

Charges were laid by Sgt. Clarke, R.C.M.P., and alleged that the accused allowed his housekeeper, Gladys Jones, to sell liquor.

Maud Jones pleaded guilty to the selling charge and was fined $500 and costs or in default of payment, three months' imprisonment.

GRANDE PRAIRIE.—With only one dissatisfied vote, taxpayers here voted to establish a library. The plebiscite was held Feb. 9.

The move had long been contemplated by the library committee, which felt that under a town library board which would control the provincial government library grant for books and periodicals, the scope of the present library could be suitably enlarged. The library board will be appointed by Mayor Lawlor and the council following the next council meeting.

The drive begins Feb. 16, and will be marked by a parade in all the churches. A wheel of fortune will be operated each Saturday night, the winner to get a $50 Victory bond.

Young Calgary Orchestra Wins Wide Approval

Playing with artistry expected and heard as a rule only from a group many years senior, the Mount Royal College Junior Symphony Orchestra of Calgary.

conducted by Jascha Galperin, scored a resounding triumph at the Empire theatre on Saturday evening.

To many the expert performance of the young musicians came as a surprise. Others were aware of the high standard prevailing in the Calgary group, as they had heard it last May at the Alberta Music Festival in McDougall auditorium. Equipped with a full battery of instruments, even to the scarce harp, oboe and bassoon, the orchestra on Saturday was commendable.

Judged by the highest standard, the playing of the Mount Royal College Junior Symphony Orchestra on Saturday was commendable. Remembering that all members are under 20 and some not more than 10 years old, the performance was outstanding. When it is realized that the oboe, bassoon and French horn are instruments calling for high skill and long, arduous practice and that harp players in this part of the country are conspicuous by their absence, the achievements justly merited the enthusiasm with which they were greeted.

STRINGS EXCEL

There was one young woman drawing a good bow in the first violin section, who appeared to be only about eight years old. And while on the subject of the violins one might add a word of praise for the meticulous attention given the bowing and the precision with which it was carried out. The string section was specially good and in this Mr. Galperin was fortunate in the assistance given by the concertmaster, Winifred Lacey. The performance was not perfect. There were lapses of intonation on the part of the wood-wind and brass sections, as well as the strings. Some of this could be charged to the change in temperature and the trip from Calgary. In particular the wood-wind instruments are vulnerable to temperature, so much so that when such an August group as the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra goes on tour the windows of the car in which the wood-wind players travel, are sealed and the car kept rigidly at an even temperature.

Three national anthems in succession were played giving the players a chance to settle down for the more difficult works to follow. First came God Save the King, then O Canada and next The Star Spangled Banner.

Opening the concert proper was the overture to Gluck's Iphigenia in Aulis, played in a scintillating manner. Mr. Galperin achieved some fine effects from the strings and with all sharing in a splendid effort.

Eric Coates' London Suite lent the resources of the orchestra to the limit. The admirable picture of Covent Garden, with its busy market and general bustle, was excellently done, as was the stately Westminster. Then Knightsbridge.

The popular march—with the portrayal of the higher side of London, its movie houses, dance halls and other attractions, gave the orchestra a chance for brilliant playing.

THE PLAYS

The strings only gave the Andante Cantabile from Tchaikovsky's Quartet in F minor and Mendelssohn's Intermezzo. These were memorably played by the orchestra at its best. Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance, with the refrain known as Land of Hope and Glory, brought the performance to a close and despite protestations that the "no encore" rule was enforced, Mr. Galperin explained that his players were tired.

Mr. Galperin conducted with a smooth, easy, but certain beat. His players proved pliable and responsive. To his energy, ability and boundless energy and enthusiasm for the cause of good music, all are indebted for the concert, which it is hoped, may be followed with another in the not too distant future.

Billy Egbert was the soloist. He gave a well-rounded, admirably prepared and executed performance of Arne's Last Will and Testament. The delicate Air and Mozart's Shepherd's Lullaby.

After the concert the symphonists were guests at a "feed" and then they embarked for home on the south-bound midnight train—J. O.

Car Is Wrecked, Occupants Only Slightly Hurt

Two men miraculously escaped serious injury at 11:15 p.m. Saturday when the car in which they were riding north on 91 street was completely wrecked when it careened from the road into the ditch and then hurtled along for an additional 100 feet before coming to a stop.

Over Sunday, 1944, 91 street, driver, received only slight facial scratches in the mishap, while his companion, George E. Webb, 1184 1/2 street, complained of pains in his left shoulder.

The accident, according to police reports, occurred when Sunday was blinded by the headlights of an approaching vehicle. He swung sharply to the east side of the road to avoid the oncoming car and, apparently misjudging the distance, crashed into the ditch. It was snowing at the time, further reducing the visibility and oil-slicking road markings.

Sunday's car was described as a total wreck and police investigating the mishap expressed amazement that either of the men managed to emerge from the crash alive.

CAR HITS WAGON

In a second accident at 1 a.m. Sunday a car crashed into the rear of a horse drawn rig in the subway on the Fort Trail leading to North Edmonton, causing the animal to bolt and damaging both the rig and auto.

J. McCready, 1850 188 street, reported to police that there was no light on the rear of the wagon and that he did not see it until it was too late to avoid the accident. He said that he took the driver, W. Alexander, R.R. 6, to his home and after ascertaining that he was not hurt, returned towards the city in search of the horse.

The animal, apparently calmed, but minus the rig, was discovered heading in the general direction of the barn on Mr. Alexander's property. It had escaped unharmed in the crash.

"Bomber's Eye" Detects Lights In City Areas

Edmonton in a "near-blackout" would present a fairly disconcerting target for raiding enemy aircraft. This was the opinion of observers who viewed the test blackout Sunday night from the "bomber's eye view" of a transport airplane.

Carrying official observers and newsmen, the 10-passenger "Yukon Emperor" of Yukon Southern Air Transport flew above the city at 10,000 feet, the lights blinked out—nearly all of them—and blinked on again.

LIGHTS IN HOUSES
Brilliant as a myriad of diamonds, the city stood out against the sombre countryside before "zero hour" of 9:30 p.m.

As the clock struck the half hour, the myriad rows of sparkling street lights went out and the city appeared to have had a dull shroud cast over it.

Accompanying the street lights, the city's windows of homes, shops, offices, and public buildings, all of which were lit up, were also darkened, and the city appeared to have been completely shrouded in darkness.

But, as the city went dark, it glimmered. It was seen that many dimmer lights were glowing from the windows of homes, shops, offices, and public buildings, all of which were lit up, were also darkened, and the city appeared to have been completely shrouded in darkness.

GREATEST "GIVE-AWAY"
But perhaps the greatest "give-away" was a series of small lights in the Jasper highway, west of the city. These, being outside the city limits, were not included in the blackout order and they streamed toward the city in a procession that reached to Stony Plain, 22 miles west.

Twisting through the city was the white, winding streak of the North Saskatchewan river, a guide to areas and districts.

It was evident, however, that one result of the near-blackout was to make individual targets and buildings more conspicuous than before. Many targets, but no trouble getting a particular picture of the city.

IN DISAPPOINTED
But disappointment was expressed by one of the chief aerial observers, Lt. Col. R. W. M. E.D., commander of the Edmonton military area.

"It was quite disappointing," Lt. Col. Brown said, "everything that could be done officially was done, but some of the housewives seem to have been inefficient."

"It was quite easy to pick out the city and then to sight targets," he said, "but it was not so easy to pick out the city and then to sight targets."

"With the river to guide them, an experienced bomber could fly over the city and, knowing its layout, pick out the general area of a target. Then it would be an easy matter to drop parachute flares and ground flares to illuminate the target and then to sight targets."

TOWNS AVOID
But in a blackout-outside, navigation to Edmonton might be difficult. On Sunday night, while Edmonton was dimmed, the surrounding towns of Stony Plain, Fort Saskatchewan, St. Albert, and Morinville were left as bright beacons.

Care on the highways also offered a guide which would be of aid to any bomber who might be sighted if they were compelled to use blind or slotted headlights.

Above the plane as observers were Lt. Col. Brown; William Barnhouse, city electrician; and Mr. J. H. Field, Yukon Southern superintendent. Capt. Sheldon Lusk, St. Albert, was also present.

RADIO CONTROL
An interesting example of civilian life was experienced. A car was noticed proceeding along the Kingsway with its lights on. The attention to the airplane called the driver to a halt. The car's lights went off. Apparently the driver was driving at a slow speed. A moment later the driver, thanked him, and returned to his car, before he switched off his lights, he was a "perfect target for a Jap bomber."

A blustering snowstorm Sunday followed a below zero temperature that made the mercury drop to 15 below at press time. The blizzard brought on Edmonton's first wintry blast since the first few days of January.

The last cold spell was experienced during the New Year's celebrations and the time the mercury dropped below zero was in January.

City Blackout Is Successful Officials Say

All citizens entered into the spirit of the experiment and met the requests of the wariness initiated by the blackout. "It was a 100 per cent success," he stated. "It could not be with the short notice and the consequent lack of time to perfect plans for the affair."

TELL-TALE LIGHTS
A reflection cast upon the wall of one building and another reflection playing upon the lower regions of another were sufficiently tell-tale to have directed attention in the event of a real invasion.

At intervals a flash bomb was thrown up certain areas of the city. Evidence of the extent to which the drivers reported revealed itself as the lights were turned on again. Both sides of Jasper were lined with cars that, one by one, came to life as the all-clear whistles sounded. In a matter of seconds, all was normal.

The blackout wasn't without its casualties, two being brought to the attention of a Bulletin reporter. A lady in the west end was knocked over by a car that was out of control when she was leaving the house to get a better view of the blackout.

The reporter took the lady to the hospital and the car was towed away. The lady was released and the car was towed away. The lady was released and the car was towed away.

OFFICIALS SATISFIED
Victory Loan officials expressed complete satisfaction with the way the blackout was carried out during Edmonton's first blackout.

H. M. Evans, chairman of the war finance committee for northern Alberta, stated that the effect was excellent. As a first attempt it was well worth the effort.

R. E. Staples, chairman of the Edmonton unit, expressed the hope that the blackout was a success. He said that the blackout was a success and that the blackout was a success.

Major Chastell also commended the motorists who were on the streets. "To a man they pulled into the curb and put out their lights," he said.
